

Tensioning the cap shrouds

When you have straightened the mast sideways and adjusted the rake, it is time to look at the cap shrouds. Tighten the cap shrouds to approx. 20% of breaking load. This corresponds to an elongation (E) of 5 mm over a length of 200 cm as indicated on the previous page.

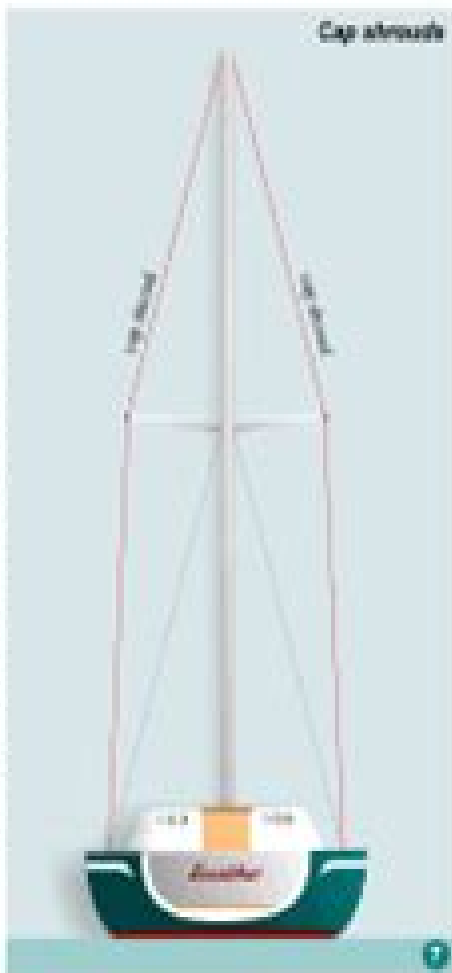

On a fractional rig with all swept spreaders the cap shrouds should be tensioned to 20% of the breaking load. This corresponds to an elongation of 7-8 mm. This rig, without runners, requires a high cap shroud tension to keep the forestay tensioned (page 74). To avoid excessive forestay sag spreader, the cap shrouds should be relatively lightly tensioned.

If 20% cap shroud tension is not sufficient to keep sag at an acceptable level, increase the tension to 25% of breaking load. Do not exceed this tension. Good rigging will produce a mast that can come up before and stay even being the mast down.

Note that you will not be able to counterbalance a wire with forestay ends of about 40-50 cm length (fig. 8). (NB! This may not be true for smaller boats e.g. dinghies where a certain counter may be essential.)

The lower shrouds and intermediate shrouds should be quite loose at this stage. If the mast has curved bows you should try to straighten them by sighting and hand tensioning.

Many yachtsmen instinctively tension their standing rigging and adjust it later when sailing. An expert. This may lead to acceptable results but the methods described above, while taking some time, are more certain and reliable (see p. 74 about pre-tensioning).

Pre-bending the mast

By adjusting fore and aft mast bend when sailing it is possible to take the maximum for various wind strength combinations. The mast is often pre-bend to prevent the mast from bending forward, make it easier to bend the mast further and make it possible to shift the range of feasible bending.

Mast bend is used, as mentioned earlier, to flatten the upper half of the main when the wind picks up and must be adjusted so as to match the designed shape of the mainsail.

Masthead rig

Pre-bend of mast stepped masts can be induced by moving the mast head and/or by use of wedges (fig. 28-27). If you don't want to do this you can, after the wedges have been inserted, tighten the July stay or forward lower shroud to obtain desired pre-bend. Tighten until mast bend is 15-20 mm. Use the main halyard to estimate the bend. NB! If you tighten the forward lower shrouds, you must check that the mast is still straight sideways. The aft lower shrouds should be loose at this stage.

Fractional rig

There are two main types of this rig. Rigs with all swept spreaders without runners and rigs with in-line spreaders which need one running backstay (runner) to support the mast.

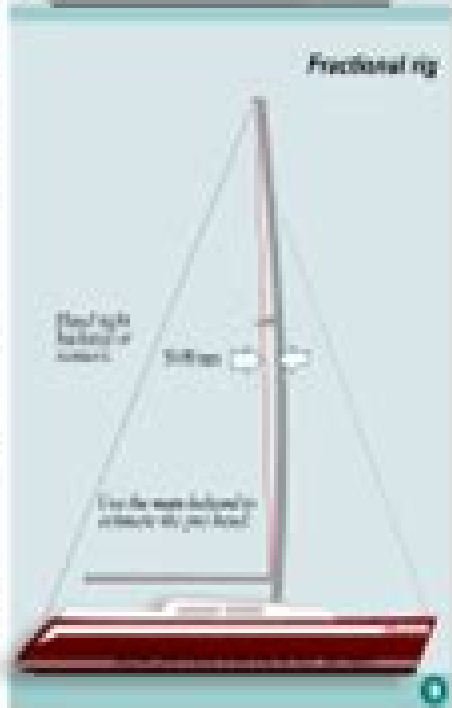

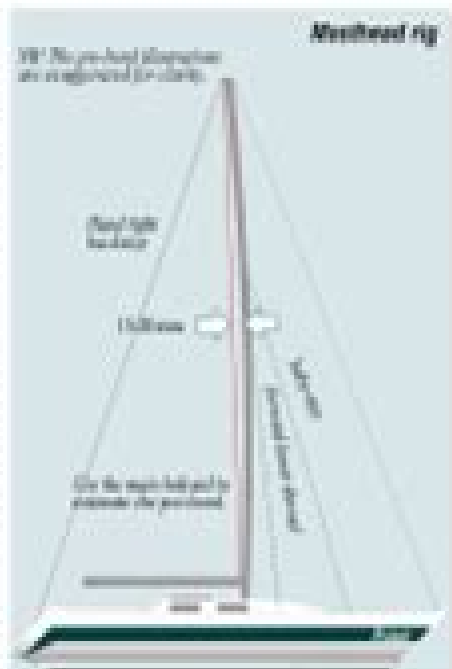

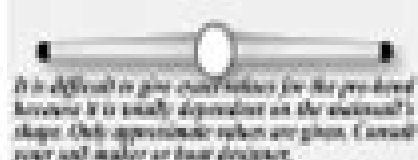

Fractional rig with all swept spreaders without runners

When the cap shrouds are tensioned to 20% of breaking load (see page 74) the mast will be forced forward as the spreaders. The lower shrouds should then be adjusted until you have the desired pre-bend.

Fractional rig with in-line spreaders using runners

The pre-bend should be adjusted in the same way as for the masthead rig. The runners should be kept bend tight during the pre-bend adjustments.
