Priorities In Biopesticide Research And Development In Developing Countries:

Priorities in Biopesticide Research and Development in Developing Countries Jeremy Harris, David Dent (Ph. D.), 2000 Biopesticides Series No 2 Biological pesticides based on pathogenic micro organisms specific to a target pest offer an ecologically sound and effective solution to pest problems They pose less threat to the environment and to human health than do chemical pesticides However despite the enormous potential for biopesticides their development commercialisation and use has been slow The information reported in this book is based on a survey of more than 100 biopesticide research workers in developing countries The results demonstrate that the main difficulties and constraints facing researchers relate to a lack of expertise in the crucial later stages of development Biopesticide research is receiving mostly low investment mainly from the public sector and requires more multidisciplinary expertise It is concluded that targeted assistance on a multinational and multi disciplinary basis is required in developing countries in order to remove the constraints Chemical Pesticide Markets, Health Risks and Residues Jeremy Harris, 2000-01-01 During recent decades there has been a steady increase in the use of chemical pesticides in both developed and developing countries This has caused widespread concern about their impact on human health and on the environment This is particularly the case in less developed countries which may lack appropriate resources to minimize the risks and rectify problems The purpose of this book is to provide a review of information on the scale of manufacture import export and use of chemical pesticides examples of direct risks to human welfare in terms of acute poisonings caused by occupational exposure and pesticide residues in food examples of problems with the storage of obsolete stocks of pesticides in developing countries The focus is on acute problems in developing countries particularly in Latin America Asia and Africa but some information is also provided about developed countries
