

Unit 4: Loops

Skill Builder 1: For Loops

In this lesson, you will learn about the loop concept in programming and examine the For...EndFor loop.

Objectives:

- Describe the concept of looping in programming
- Write programs and functions using the For...EndFor structure
- Control the amount of output space (scrolling) taken using DispAt
- Using getKey(1) as a 'pause' command

Teacher Tip: There are three fundamental loops in TI-Nspire™ CX TI-Basic: For, While, and Loop. A loop structure gives a program the ability to process a set of statements over and over, either iterating over a sequence of values (as in the For loop) or until a specific condition is met (or not) as in While and Loop. Unit 4 lessons introduce each one of these structures individually.

Programs may become complicated because it is sometimes necessary to mix all the control structures, (sequence, If statements and loops) into a program to satisfy more complex algorithms. Indenting and comments help to clarify programs.

This is what makes programming fun.

About Loops

The TI-Basic programming language has the ability to process a set of statements over and over. This repetition of statements is called looping.

The three loop structures you will learn in this Unit are each accessed by selecting menu > Control from the Program Editor menu. (See For, While, and Loop to the right.)

The While... and Loop... structures will be explored in later lessons in this Unit. For more information about additional Control structures in this menu, see the Reference Guide at the TI Codes website.

For...EndFor

The For...EndFor loop is used to process an arithmetic sequence of values. This process is known as "iteration."

Selecting the For...EndFor statement from the control menu gives you the necessary components for building the rest of the structure:
