Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand, had an extraordinarily productive interaction between mathematicians and philosophers during the time I spent there, 1973–8, on the first lectureship of my academic career. I particularly remember the weekly seminars, including George Hughes and Max Crosswell from the philosophy department, and Will Malcolm, Ken Plodger, Rob Goldblatt, and others from the pure mathematics department. I also recall attending a superb course of lectures, given by Ken Plodger, on the history of mathematics.

I am also grateful to the philosophical community in New Zealand as a whole, both for the time when I was in New Zealand, and for the continued contact I have had by attending their annual philosophy conferences, and reading several papers there which evolved into this book. And long before my philosophical career, I was deeply influenced by a gifted musician and mathematics teacher in Christchurch, Kit Powell, a Pythagorean who enabled me to see the mathematics in music, and to hear the music in mathematics.

In Melbourne, I have tried out the ideas in this book at Melbourne University, Monash University, and (my own) La Trobe University. I have relied heavily on regular meetings of the Melbourne Semantics Group. Some of the local sources for my ideas are sufficiently acknowledged in the text. But one source is mentioned nowhere in particular, because it has contributed everywhere; and that source has been my colleague Robert Pargeter, with whom I have shared most of the courses I have taught at La Trobe University.

I began this book while on an Outside Studies Programme, from July 1983 to January 1984, granted by La Trobe University. In July I
