

This book forms a most valuable guide to the advanced worker; it will take its place in every bacteriological laboratory, but it is in no sense a students' textbook.

BACTERIAL VACCINES AND THEIR POSITION IN THERAPEUTICS.—By Leonard S. Dudgeon, C.M.G., C.B.E., F.R.C.S. Bombay: Oxford University Press, and London: Constable and Co., 1927. Pp. 57. Price, 7s. 6d. net.

This forms an excellent summary of existing knowledge of the use of vaccines in the prevention and treatment of disease. Its most valuable feature is that there is no exaggeration in the claims made for the various systems of vaccine treatment. It is impossible to lay down dogmatic rules in connection with such controversial points as the value of prophylactic vaccination against influenza and colds, but the reader will find Dudgeon's work a sane and reliable guide.

SEGREGATION AND AUTOGAMY IN BACTERIA.—By F. H. Stewart, M.A., D.Sc., M.D. London: Adlard & Son, Ltd., 1927. Pp. 104. Price, 7s. 6d. net.

This book, which is very highly technical, describes the author's view on the segregation and autogamy in bacteria. It deals largely with the mutation changes in the Muciflavus coli communis and the Bacillus dysenteriae (Flexner), and the typhoid bacillus. The author however neglects the work of d'Hérelle and others showing how these mutation changes may be brought about as the result of bacteriophage action. These mutation forms are then resistant to the action of the bacteriophage.

The author is difficult to follow in his summary and in the deductions he has drawn as the result of these experiments. There is a good deal of indiscriminate reasoning by analogy from the protozoa to bacteria, which is always a dangerous method to adopt in substantiating a theory.

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY OF THE EYE.—By Dr. Max Coque, B.Sc. London: J. and R. Fleming, Ltd., 1927. Pp. 488.

This is an unusual book, published for the instruction of prescribing opticians, and very ambitious in its scope, as it attempts in a short scope to deal with the general principles of physiology and pathology in the human body, and especially the physiology of the eye, as well as the detailed anatomy of the eye and orbit, and the usual methods of examination of the eye, both healthy and pathological, all in the short space of 445 pages. Needless to say it is very compressed and uneven, giving curious details in some points not usually in books, especially in connection with comparative anatomy and physiology, and in others it is very brief, and only to be followed by one having already a fair general knowledge of biology. The best part of this publication is the excellent series of stereoscopic photos provided with a simple form of stereoscope, which give a really good idea of the general bony anatomy of the orbit, and the macroscopic anatomy of the dissected eye. This is really good and useful, whereas one fears the text of the book, while possibly useful for those for whom it has been written, will be found of little use to medical men who have access to the many good textbooks on the eye.

RECENT ADVANCES IN OPHTHALMOLOGY.—By W. Stewart Duke Elder, D.Sc., Ph.D., M.D., Ch.B., F.R.C.S. London: J. and A. Churchill, 1927. Pp. 343, with 4 coloured plates and 73 text figures. Price, 12s. 6d. net.

This book, the last issue of this good series, is well up to the standards of the previous volumes, and is a really valuable résumé, well put together and balanced. It starts with a discussion on the nature of light and its influence on the eye; accommodation, according to modern views, and the causes of halos; and deals mainly with the more scientific aspects of these problems in a very good clear way. It then deals briefly with the recent work in embryology and the recent methods of diagnosis, slit-lamp, red-free light and anterior mesoscopy. This part is short but good and very well illustrated with coloured plates. The physiology of the eye is then dealt with, the intra-ocular circulation, intra-ocular pressure, and the nature of the fluids of the eye, especially from the bio-chemical point of view, and this forms a preparation to the consideration of the diseases of the eye, high blood pressure and its results, retinal haemorrhages, and glaucoma. This last is treated in considerable detail and the recent theory associating this disease in part at least with changes in the hydrogen-ion content of the blood is well put forward.

Cataract is described in the light of slit-lamp researches, its pathology discussed and the effects of light on the lens nutrition pointed out, and recent views on sympathetic ophthalmitis described, though the recent note of Jackson in the American Journal of Ophthalmology as to the comparative rarity in the diagnosis of this condition since Wassermann's reaction blood tests became common is not mentioned. Photo-therapy, its use and abuse, and the newer methods of local anaesthesia are briefly described, and the book concludes with a very good and fairly detailed description of the recent neurology of the eye.

The stimulating and interesting character of the book as a supplement to the usual large textbooks will be obvious from this short résumé, and one can strongly recommend all those interested in eye work to get it and read it carefully, though in places they will probably find it fairly stiff reading.

OPHTHALMIC YEAR BOOK, VOL. XXIII, CONTAINING BIBLIOGRAPHIES, DIGESTS AND INDEXES OF THE LITERATURE OF OPHTHALMOLOGY FOR THE YEAR, 1926.—Edited by William H. Crisp. Chicago: Ophthalmic Publishing Co., 1927. Pp. 338.

This book continues to serve as a valuable reference record of the ophthalmic literature of the past year, and the present volume is well up to the standard of its predecessors. It is unfortunately, however, the last of its series, as difficulties in its production and want of support have made it impossible for the publishers to continue to produce it in this form, as a Supplement to the American Journal of Ophthalmology. It is hoped, however, that the series may be carried on in another form, and a hint as to the possibility of this appears in the American Journal of Ophthalmology, and one can only hope that these efforts will be successful.

THE BLOOD VESSELS OF THE HUMAN SKIN AND THEIR RESPONSES.—By Thomas Lewis, M.D., F.R.S. London: Shaw & Sons, 1927. Pp. 322. Illustrated. Price, 37s. 6d. net.

We must congratulate the author of this excellent work on the physiology of the blood vessels of the skin. The book has been well got up and the illustrations have been very finely reproduced by the publishers. The work opens up a new line of thought about the nature of the reaction of the finest and larger vessels of the skin to different stimuli. Every worker in dermatology should possess this work, which gives a clear description of how to investigate the mechanism of arteriolar and capillary action. We consider that Krogh's work on the pressor substances in the posterior lobe of the pituitary gland in maintaining tone as regards permeability should also have been considered by the author. Sir Thomas Lewis has particularly studied the action of various kinds of stimuli on the different vessels of the skin, or clearly demonstrates that the finest vessels are not under a nervous control. He considers that when the skin is stroked by a hard object, the red line is due to the mechanical stimulus, whilst the flare and
