

The Referendum Papers: Essays on Secession and National Unity

edited by David Cameron. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1999. Pp. xviii, 432.

The Referendum Papers is a group of essays by prominent English Canadian social scientists written in the wake of the 1995 referendum in Quebec. The essays are about

- “– keeping Quebec in Confederation;
- renewing the federation;
- thinking about secession; and
- thinking about a new Canada without Quebec.”

The book is in two parts: the first, called “The Canadian Union Papers,” is about what has come to be called Plan A on how Canada might be reformed to persuade Quebec voters to remain in Confederation or to change Canada in ways that are desirable for all Canadians. The second part, called “The Secession Papers,” is about Plan B on the mechanism of secession, and Plan C on how the constituent parts of what was Canada might be reorganized in the event that Quebec does eventually secede.

The first half of the book is mostly about trade and language. Two papers, “Drawing on our Inner Strength: Canada’s Economic Citizenship in an Era of Evolving Federalism” by Daniel Schwanen, and “Securing Canadian Economic Union: Legal and Constitutional Options for the Federal Government” by Robert Howse, consider how to remove the remaining impediments to the free movement of goods and services within Canada. Howse would like a constitutional amendment enshrining the Agreement on Internal Trade, but he does not see that as a likely prospect. His review of the relevant treaties and Supreme Court decisions is a bit terse for the general reader who may not already be familiar with this material. Accommodation between Quebec and the rest of Canada is discussed in “Time Out: Assessing Incremental Strategies for Enhancing the Canadian Political Union” by Roger Gibbins and Katherine Harmsworth, and “Citizen Engagement in Conflict Resolution: Lessons for Canada in International Experience” by Janice Stein, David Cameron, Richard Simeon and Alan Alexandroff. It is observed in the first of these papers that though “lip service to equalization may continue, the long-term tension between equalization and decentralization must be recognized” (p. 59). The authors of the latter paper have great faith in the power of negotiation. As a cure for tensions in Montreal, they recommend, “an informal group of concerned influential citizens from across the fault lines of the conflict, individuals well-connected to the political leaderships of the several communities, could join in a problem-solving workshop with several objectives” (p. 184). To make any coming referendum fair, they advocate that “a group should be sponsored and convened by private interests” and “its work should be underpinned by a multi-authored resource document that reviews the lessons to be learned from democratic theory and from international experience respecting major constitutional change, restructuring and secession” (p. 189).

In “Language Matters: Ensuring that the Sugar Does Not Dissolve in the Coffee,” John Richards focuses on the deep concern of French Canadians in Quebec for the preservation of their language, threatened both by the predominance of English in North America and by the unique place of English as the working language of commerce and communication throughout the world. The paper contains a good review of proposals to protect the French language in Canada. Richards advocates several constitutional amendments to deal with these concerns. He would amend section 92 “with a blunt statement to the effect that each province (or Quebec alone) can determine an official language for itself and can legislate over matters pertaining to the public use of language within the province” (p. 124). To the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, he would add a clause stating: “This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the
