evergreens that had decorated the room were powdered with flour and strewn with tufts of cotton like snow Also diamond dust had been lightly sprinkled on them and glittering crystal icicles hung from the branches At each end of the room on the wall hung a beautiful bear skin rug These rugs were for prizes one for the girls and one for the boys And this was the game The girls were gathered at one end of the room and the boys at the other and one end was called the North Pole and the other the South Pole Each player was given a small flag which they were to plant on reaching the Pole This would have been an easy matter but each traveller was obliged to wear snowshoes These were not the real thing but smaller affairs made of pasteboard But when they were tied on the wearer felt clumsy indeed and many of the girls declared they could not walk in them at all And in addition each one was blindfolded However everybody made an attempt and at a given signal the young people started from their opposite ends of the room and endeavoured to make progress toward the goal as they blindly stumbled along Patty concluded to move very slowly thinking this the surest way to make a successful trip So she scuffled along among the other laughing girls now and then stumbling over a hillock which was really a hassock or a sofa cushion under the white floor covering It was great fun and the girls cheered each other on as they pursued their blinded way And then about midway of the room they met the boys coming toward them Then there was scrambling indeed as the explorers tried to get out of each other's way and follow their own routes
