

Author's Preface

Now that you yourself are here, I am unconsciously aware of many things that might have been said which have been left unsaid. In general, I have tried to begin where we are and to work up to where we want to be. If I have kept to the line of a plain love and of a simple faith, and have omitted the subtleties and refinements, it is because I believe that the ills of our country today are not so much the ills of spiritual pride as they are the ills of moral decadence and of religious confusion. It is the need of our times that there should be power and light instead of stumbling and darkness.

These pages are dedicated to that spiritual bond which, during the recent war, held my wife and myself together in fellowship even though we were as far apart physically as east by sea with others at sea and west with yours on shore.
