

people are losing sleep to catch a rerun of Outer Limits—which airs after 11 p.m. in many areas. The show is an amalgam of millions of science-fiction episodes. Invariably, some of the episodes are production ever made for television. They are a very special journey into...

"If you believe in something, if you are angry or disturbed about something, or exasperated with joy or shaken with worry about something, be it Conformity, or Discrimination, or Politics, or Conformity, be it Patriotism, or Capital Punishment, or Disarmament, or Man's Inaccessibility to Man, or Fame, or Fame, or Moral Physical Slavery, or Addiction, or Mass Culture, or Fanaticism, or Isolationism, or Peace—if you believe in your need to state your belief, you have the thread [of a story theme]. And all the rest is craft and art and intellect."

"A high literary style encompassing the bold use of poetic imagery and stunning language is entirely fitting and not structural to the Science-Fiction form. The very serene and wonderful nature of Stefan, especially when faced with imaginative and innovative Fiction, would seem to beg and perhaps inspire high-level thinking and writing."

ABC had wanted an hour-long

... thinking that a writer would... to an alien monster to... his "Bear," Stefan's... manufacturer admonished:

... the viewer will follow and care... at times even identify with

... a 'monster' or an embodied 'vicious'... or a strange and curiously 'vicious'... but this identification cannot... be sustained if the viewer is asked to... view monsters and elements and... creatures exclusively.

... Repeatedly, the success stress the... importance of theme and humanity:

"Somehow the viewer must see himself, and while he may see himself or a part of himself in a monster, he will resist and lose interest unless we provide him with a real and human and recognizable face-figure for ourselves figure as the case may be."

... But the Bear was always a major... consideration. A typical Outer Limits episode budget was $150,000—of which fully $40,000 would go for special effects. Stefan employed the Ray Marov Company and Project's Unlimited, a small out- fit where young Jim Danforth (who recently did the stop-motion work for Flash Gordon) was employed. Most Flash Gordon heads were sculpted by Wah Chang, who later would create many monster heads for Star Trek—the tall vampire of "Man Trap" and the Gorn of "Arena Trap" and the Gorn of "Arena Trap" among them.

... Some Outer Limits monsters actually made appearances in Star Trek episodes. Creatures from both "So-called Chance" and "Fun and Games" were used in Star Trek's "The Cage" and "The Menagerie."

... So much was spent on monsters and effects in the beginning that Stefan found himself with little too low to make one of the mid-season (first year) shows. To meet schedule and remain within the budget, he and Leslie Stevens came up with "Controlled Experiment"—a comedy about two Martians sent to earth to investigate our quiet custom of homicide. The story required the aliens to use a machine that would play back a murder in slow and fast motion. The rubbering of the same piece of film ate up considerable running time and gave Stefan the low-budget episode he needed. The episode starred Barry Morse (Spock, 1966) and Carroll O'Connor (Ali in the Family).

... Stefan wanted "actors with intensity"—whether they were cast in comedy or drama. And he introduced and used a great many notably intense performers: David McCullum,
