

other. Orientalism early took him in its grip, and from the Hebrew he went to Coptic and the Hieroglyphics, then to the Assyrian, and finally to Sanskrit and Chinese. As a student he was not a disgrace, and he has passports for business capacity and application to his duties, but is of opinion that, left to himself, he would wreck the best business that was ever founded inside of twelve months. He loathes trade, and always gets the worst of a bargain. He is just a born student, with tastes for poetry, music, and the fine arts. Writing and lecturing come easily to him, as water to a duck's foot. He has never known how to invest his faculties, and nobody seems particularly anxious to inform him. His father died when he was four years old, on April 30th, 1868. His mother passed away on May 8th, 1891, and Madame Blavatsky, with whom he was then living, died on the same day. At that time he was acting as General Secretary of the British Section of the Theosophical Society.

His connection with that body was brought about through his correspondence with Madame Blavatsky, extending over some years, and at her invitation he went to London to help in the work of organizing the Section to which he was attached, being at that time Vice-President of the Blavatsky Lodge. Later, in 1890, Mrs. Besant joined the movement, and was in every way a valuable acquisition. As fellow students they were thrown much together, and Sepharial learned to value her friendship and esteem her character.

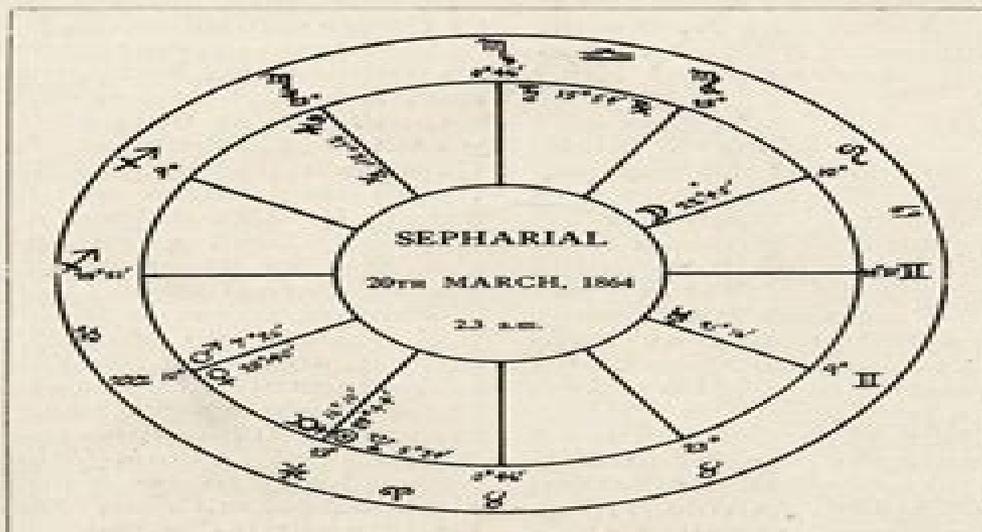

After the death of H. P. B. he was drafted to India, where he acted as one of the Secretaries of the Indian Section and spend his time writing, lecturing, studying, and visiting various centres of interest. He learned some astrology in India that has proved valuable, and formed associations which have lasted until now. These he values very highly. He returned to England in 1894, married in 1896 (June), and has since lead the roaming life of a free lance in journalism.

His works embrace a variety of subjects, as the following list will show: The Great

Eclipse; Phrenoscopy; The Little Book of Magic; Book of the Cards; The Crystal and the Seer; The Manual of Astrology; The Simple Way (Chinese); Book of Generations (Hebrew); Prognostic Astronomy; La Volasfera (Italian); Bruno's One and Only Cause (Italian); Shu King (Chinese); Classics of Confucius; Second Sight; Kabala of Numbers; Cosmic Symbolism, etc.

His forthcoming works will include Kabala of Numbers (Part II.); New Astrological Tables; What Death Said (a translation of the Kathopanishad with Commentary); and The Silver Key.* These are expected to be in the press shortly.

Necessarily, he has not published all his astrological works. The more practical ones, which are included in his "Arcana," are the result of an insistent application on the part of his correspondents to apply his faculty to the bread and butter question.
