

The 5 Steps of Mastery Learning

1

Pre-Assessment

Ensure students have previously mastered the skills or knowledge necessary to move into the current material.

If the students do not have the needed competencies, the teacher moves backward to ensure students master the previous material before moving forward.

2

Instruction

Once students have exhibited competency in the foundational skills or knowledge necessary to the current material, the teacher will begin instruction.

Clearly communicate the mastery grading scale they will use to determine if students have achieved competency.

3

Formative Assessment

After the instruction stage, teachers will assess students' skills and knowledge through formative assessment.

Formative assessment can measure student competencies through a variety of methods - anything from exit tickets to homework assignments to classroom polls.

4

Correction or Enrichment

Students who demonstrate high competency can continue to grow their knowledge and skillset through personalized enrichment instruction.

Those who have not demonstrated mastery can receive additional personalized instruction and practice opportunities from the teacher.

5

Summative Grading

Once a teacher believes all students are at or close to mastery, the teacher offers a cumulative test, essay, or project to assess if each student has mastered the content.

Those who do not score at the master level simply require additional time and support to reach that level of competency.
