

PREFACE

This issue marks the relocation of the journal from Duke University to Florida State University, and it inaugurates the term of the new editors, John Corrigan and Amanda Porterfield. We are, first of all, grateful to the editors at Duke for their vision and energy over the previous six years. They have succeeded brilliantly in leading the journal into intellectual territory that offers opportunities for broader and richer discussion of religion and culture. Through their efforts, the journal has cultivated conversation not only with history that is focused on themes such as gender, the body, reading, material culture, social status, transnationalism, and ethnicity, but with scholarship representing disciplinary perspectives that can enhance and focus the historical emphases of the journal. They likewise have put the journal on track to view the history of Christianity globally, through their increased attention to Asian, African, and Latin American Christianity. We thank Grant Wacker, Richard P. Heitzenrater, Elizabeth A. Clark, and Hans J. Hillerbrand for passing along to us a journal that is intellectually vibrant, authoritative, and forward-looking.

We likewise wish to thank the ASCH committee chaired by Steven J. Stein, and including Leigh Eric Schmidt and Laurie Maffly-Kipp, for their outstanding work in evaluating the prospects for the journal both in terms of its relocation and as regards its long term development. They have gone well beyond the call of duty in their investment of thought about how best to provide for the future of the journal, and they have made our job more of a pleasure by framing a sound plan for reorganization of the editorial board and by establishing a beachhead for conversations with potential sponsors. We are proud to have them as colleagues and undertake our own work at the journal with confidence drawn from knowing that they have been involved in thinking about it.

We are delighted to introduce the new editorial staff, which is a board of Associate Editors. Elizabeth A. Clark very generously has agreed to our request to remain on for the area of early Christianity. Thomas F. X. Noble will be responsible for medieval submissions and Carlos M. N. Eire for Reformation and early modern. Enrique Dussel will oversee Latin and South America, Myung Soo Park will advise on Asian, and Dana L. Robert has agreed to wear several hats, including African. John Corrigan and Amanda Porterfield will be responsible for scholarship in American and will make all final editorial decisions based upon reports from Associate Editors and peer reviewers.
