INTRODUCTION

The anatomical, physiological, and behavioral characteristics of the laboratory golden Syrian hamster (Mesocricetus auratus) are summarized in this chapter.

EXTERNAL FEATURES

An adult Syrian hamster is approximately 14–19 cm in length and weighs approximately 114–140 grams.

Hamsters have thick compact bodies with short legs, a short tail, large cheek pouches, and excess loose skin. Dorsal flank glands, which are more prominent in males, are another noticeable external feature. Flank glands are sebaceous glands that are responsive to androgens and used to mark territory. A reddish gold dorsum with a grayish white ventral surface is the most common coloration pattern of the short and smooth haircoat found in hamsters purpose-bred for biomedical research. The number of pattern mutant and coat color genes observed in hamster colonies has increased
