

THE PRIVATE PAPERS OF SENATOR VANDENBERG

This is "inside history" of the finest type. Most of it is in the form of a diary, pounded out night after night on the Senator's portable typewriter. The diary is supplemented by letters, speeches and memoranda, all of them linked by the necessary minimum of editorial comment. The result is of the greatest importance to historians, of immense interest to the general public, and, without a word, even humorous, self-portrait of one of the best loved figures in the political life of our time.

The story begins with that turning point in history, the passage, in September 1939, of the Lend-Lease Bill, and forms a continuous narrative right up to Vandenberg's death in 1951. The material is so rich that if one began referring to highlights, one wouldn't know where to end. Revealed here, for instance, is the process whereby one of America's leading isolationists became one of its leading internationalists. Even after Pearl Harbour, when Vandenberg announced "support without reservation to the President in his answer to Japan", he was still privately recording his doubt and his regrets. But he is soon making his first small step along the road towards a bipartisan foreign policy: and it is fascinating to watch his mind changing. He is highly suspicious of Roosevelt's secret commitments with Stalin, but supports the UNRRA Bill in 1943, while still referring to himself as an
