

Managing Toxic Emotions at Work: HR's Unique Role as the "Organizational Shock Absorber"

Teresa A. Daniel

Layoffs, harassment, discrimination, mergers and acquisitions, personality conflicts, or an abusive boss are just a few of the workplace situations that can (and usually do) generate intense emotional pain for employees—feelings like anger, frustration, stress, disappointment, and even fear. Unfortunately, these types of events are predictable and somewhat inevitable, but it is the way organizations handle them that can create a serious problem for employees.

If these situations are managed poorly, the chronic anger or prolonged stress they create can result in an undesirable by-product known as organizational toxicity.¹ Over time, the buildup of these negative emotions will create a workplace culture where employees feel devalued, demoralized, and often hopeless or litigious. Under those circumstances, employees "will become disconnected from what is going on at work, become obsessive about their pain, the source of it, and how others are responding"² (or not) to it—conditions ensuring they are no longer productive or actively engaged.

Peter Frost first identified the phenomenon and coined the term for a special role that some employees take on in an effort to alleviate this toxicity for their employees. He called them toxin handlers—people within an organization who "voluntarily shoulder the sadness, frustration, bitterness, and the anger that are endemic to organizational life."³

Employees routinely bring emotionally charged problems to HR, with the expectation that they will receive help to resolve those issues or at least see someone who will listen to them.⁴ This article examines those brave HR practitioners who voluntarily step up and serve their organizations as toxin handlers.

Employees routinely bring emotionally charged problems to HR, with the expectation that they will receive help to resolve those issues or at least see someone who will listen to them.

WHO THE TOXIN HANDLERS ARE

Toxin handlers are typically compassionate people who recognize that "when people's hearts are broken, their heads don't work."⁵ They take time to actively listen to and work with employees to help them resolve their problems. Their overarching goal is to hit the "sweet spot" of caring for and helping employees to reduce their emotional pain, while maintaining a sharp awareness of the need to keep the organization functioning and profitable—which means trying to resolve issues quickly so that the employees can return to work.⁶ The achievement of both objectives is a delicate balance for HR practitioners, to be sure, and it requires both business acumen and a high degree of emotional intelligence.
