Leiby's reflected, he comes forward and says, "By the way, I got one of these leaks too." Woodward and Bernstein ignored the Beltway conventional wisdom and did old-fashioned reporting and kept digging. Now, three decades later, Woodward [acts like] one of the people he ignored during Watergate. He has done absolutely nothing to relieve people of the notion that he's become a prisoner of his sources.

BC: You also point out the close personal relationships between journalists and members of the Bush Administration.

Beutler: There's not anything trendy about journalists becoming friends with officials. What I suggest in those friendships may have led to this extraordinary timidity. Smart, savvy journalists live and live again have refused to ask pertinent questions. An example I use is Ted Koppel's friendship with Secretary of State Colin Powell. They're good buddies. There's nothing wrong with that. Powell gave a crucial presentation at the UN in February 2003 that was supposed to show the extraordinary WMD's that Saddam Hussein had and how he lied about them for a decade. Within weeks, the presentation was shown to be almost a complete sham, riddled with errors and bogus information. Powell admitted last year that the presentation was a blight on his record [that] he'll have to live with. In the 12 months after his UN presentation, Powell gave four exclusive interviews to his friend Ted Koppel at Nightline, and Koppel asked him about 60 questions, and none were about his bogus, embarrassing presentation that helped lead the country to war. That's revealing about how this game works and how consumers aren't in on the friendships, so they don't understand why journalists isn't what it's supposed to be.

BC: It seems programs like Meet the Press became a platform for the Administration.

Beutler: After 9/11, Meet the Press became Dick Cheney's personal soapbox. It was the only Sunday morning show he appeared on for two or three years, and [host] Tim Russert did very little in terms of asking difficult questions. Cheney realized in and Russert let him tell any fantastic tale about Saddam or al Qaeda or terrorists in America, or anything he wanted. It wasn't really journalism.

BC: And Russert is a friend of Cheney's?

Beutler: Yes.

BC: The mainstream press has failed to show the reality of the Iraq war with its refusal to show coffins of dead soldiers, let alone images of the wounded and dead.

Beutler: An LA Times study in 2004 looked at 12 major newspapers over a six-month period and literally could not find images of dead or wounded American soldiers, and only a few of dead or wounded Iraqis. So the story of the war was told with an anti-war approach. ABC agreed to never show images of dead U.S. soldiers [in Iraq]. [But] at the Battle of Mogadishu in 1993 under Clinton, there was a famous image of a corpse of a U.S. soldier being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu, and all the networks ran it, and it was on the front pages of many newspapers. Fast forward to 2003, and that sort of image was absolutely forbidden on television or in newspapers.

BC: Is the coverage getting any better?

Beutler: Unfortunately, no. I finished the book in March, and it's gotten worse. After the killing of innocent [leader] Zarqawi in Iraq, CNN did a whole segment on how Bush might be getting a bounce in the polls because of this "good news." The fact that CNN thought it newsworthy that Bush might be getting popular was a stunning precedent for newsgathering.

With the Lebanon crisis, in the first few days there was absolutely a knee-jerk reaction of the press to portray Bush as a man of action, working the phones, pressing for peace. It's clear now that Bush's policy decision was to do absolutely nothing. The policy has been to do nothing — a fairly radical foreign policy initiative — but the press won't go there.

The mainstream pundits went over the top with hysterical rhetoric about [anti-war Connecticut Senate candidate Ned] Lamont and said his supporters were bomb throwers. David Broder of the Washington Post called [Lamont's supporters] elitist insurgents. Despite a CNN poll showing that 60 percent of Americans disagree with the war, the mainstream press refuses to acknowledge that the anti-war position is the clear position of a majority of Americans.

BC: Can average citizens do anything to promote improved news coverage?

Beutler: I wish I had a great answer. The bloggers are helping keep journalists honest. In political terms, Democrats in Washington have to stand up to the press. The mistake Democrats continue to make is they think journalists, deep down, are really on their side. They don't realize the game is rigged because Democrats don't like to play hardball and they fear the consequences. But Democrats need to stand up, because it doesn't matter what your message is if it can't get through a distorted media filter.

BC: As with John Kerry and the Swift Boat charges?

Beutler: Kerry's problem was he thought the mainstream media was going to save the day. The Swift Boat charges were spurious and had no documentation to back them up, and the bodies were so obvious that the press would have a field day and it would backfire on Republicans. But the press pretended [the facts] weren't obvious. They throw up their hands, said "With the fog of war, we may never know what John Kerry did in Vietnam." But the U.S. Navy knows what John Kerry did in Vietnam because he has a detailed military record. It should have taken two or three days to pull out the Swift Boat lies for what it was—an expensive dirty trick. ■
