Abstract: One of the most distracting features of Einstein field equations of the gravitational field is, due to the appearance of the energy-momentum tensor, the field equations are not purely geometrical. In this work, we show that this blemish can be avoided if the field equations of the gravitational field are formulated in the same approach as that of the electromagnetic field, in which the energy-momentum tensor is obtained from the more fundamental physical objects, such as the electric and magnetic fields, that obey the more fundamental field equations, such as Maxwell field equations.

In physics, energy is the property of a physical system that can be defined in terms of other physical entities. Even though energy has a purely mathematical character, the concept of energy is useful because it is a conserved quantity. In classical mechanics, energy can be derived from the concept of work done W which is defined as the line integral of a force \mathbf{F} along a path C [1]

$$W = \int_C \mathbf{F} \cdot d\mathbf{r} \quad (1)$$

In the case when the force \mathbf{F} is formulated by Newton's dynamical law and is defined in terms of the potential energy V , as given below

$$\mathbf{F} = m \frac{d^2 \mathbf{r}}{dt^2} \quad (2)$$

$$\mathbf{F} = -\nabla V \quad (3)$$

then the conserved energy E for a particle of inertial mass m is established as

Even though it is considered only as a conservation law, rather than a dynamical law such as Newton's second law, the expression for the energy given in Equation (4) can be used to describe the dynamics of a physical system. For example, if the potential energy V is obtained from an inverse square field, $V = k/r$, then Equation (4) becomes
