Shadow Crossing:

System Earth via Geodetic-Geophysical Space Techniques Frank M. Flechtner, Thomas Gruber, Andreas Güntner, M. Manda, Markus Rothacher, Tilo Schöne, Jens Wickert, 2010-07-10 Our planet is currently experiencing substantial changes due to natural phenomena and direct or indirect human interactions Observations from space are the only means to monitor and quantify these changes on a global and long term perspective Continuous time series of a large set of Earth system parameters are needed in order to better understand the processes causing these changes as well as their interactions This knowledge is needed to build comprehensive Earth system models used for analysis and prediction of the changing Earth Geodesy and geophysics contribute to the understanding of system Earth through the observation of global parameter sets in space and time such as tectonic motion Earth surface deformation sea level changes and gravity magnetic and atmospheric fields In the framework of the German geoscience research and development programme GEOTECHNOLOGIEN research projects related to the theme Observing the Earth System from Space have been funded within two consecutive phases since 2002 both covering 3 years The projects address data analysis and model development using the satellite missions CHAMP GRACE GOCE and complementary ground or airborne observations The results of the first phase projects have been published in the Springer book titled Observation of the Earth System from Space edited by Flury Rummel Reigber Rothacher Boedecker and Schreiber in 2006 The present book titled System Earth via Geodetic Geophysical Space Techniques summarizes in 40 scientific papers the results of eight coordinated research projects funded in the second phase of this programme 2005 2008

the Earth It is therefore important to determine the future development of the object population as well as the effectiveness of debris mitigation measures in long term simulations Orbital propagation the calculation of an object s movement in its orbit poses a challenge for this research due to the high computation times of the complex perturbation models involved With populations consisting of hundreds of thousands of objects as well as simulation time frames of up to 200 years these calculations can take up hours of computation time To speed up this process the analytical propagator Ikebana is introduced in this work of applied computer science in engineering The program runs on graphics processing units hardware designed for massively parallel execution of up to thousands of concurrent threads This reduces the overall run time for large object populations from hours to minutes Porting software from a conventional CPU is not a trivial task and involves a number of potential pitfalls and optimization opportunities which are detailed in this work The propagator is integrated into other applications via a generic multi platform interface specifically designed for this task It allows to develop the propagator separately and integrate it into other tools as a plugin at run time The interface s architecture serves as a design template for analytical propagation software
