(SINGAPORE)

1944 was a year of significant events in Singapore. The Japanese occupation continued, and the city was under strict control. The economy was struggling, and there were reports of food shortages and disease. However, the Singapore Chinese Chamber of Commerce and Industry was established in 1944, which was a major step towards economic recovery and self-governance. The year also saw the formation of the Singapore Chinese Education Council, which aimed to improve the quality of education for Chinese students. The year ended with the Japanese surrender in August 1945, which brought an end to the occupation and the start of a new era for Singapore.
