PURPOSE

The Learning for influence methodology is for organizations working in development who want to better understand and document how they influence policy and practice.

This includes organizations that are working to create change within systems, such as education, health, agriculture, and governance, and organizations working for institutional development at all levels. The methodology aims to help these organizations better understand the change processes that they contribute to, as well as how they are changing as individuals.

What does impact on policy and practice mean in your work?

What barriers can your organization tell about how you achieve change?

This methodology will help answer these questions. It will help you gain a deeper understanding of the policy change processes that you are engaging in, and it will help you understand how to influence them better in the future.

This methodology will help you document your knowledge of the change processes you are trying to influence by helping you articulate the values that inform how you work and the context that you work in, and creating narratives that show how your organization has impact. This methodology also emphasizes the importance of the perspectives of people working within organizations to achieve change, and on the stories that they can tell together about their experiences. This emphasizes work people do the feedback of how impact happens over time.

The methodology focuses on four dimensions that shape how influencing policy and practice happens: context, organizational approaches, examples from practice, and stories of impact. The methodology aims to generate multiple perspectives within an organization and can also be used for collaborative learning across a network of organizations working together. Therefore, the methodology should involve a variety of individuals within organizations working to influence policy and practice.
