The Fall of Louisbourg

The fortress of Louisbourg was attacked in two major sieges. The first siege took place in 1745 and the second took place in 1758.

First Siege of Louisbourg

The Siege of Louisbourg took place in 1745 when a New England colonial force aided by a British fleet captured Louisbourg. This was the capital of the French province of Ile-Royale during the War of the Austrian Succession.

Louisbourg was a standing threat to all the Northern British colonies. The French government had spent twenty-five years in fortifying it, and the cost of its defenses was great.

The fortress was acknowledged as having superior seaward defenses, but a series of low rises behind these defenses provided attackers places to erect siege batteries.

In 1744, Britain was drawn into conflict with France as a result of the War of the Austrian Succession. Up until this point the fortress had not participated in any military actions. It did provide refuge for the First Nations people allied with the French who raided English settlements.

On the 24th of May 1744, a force of soldiers from Louisbourg aboard a fleet of 17 vessels made a surprise attack on the small English fort and settlement at Grassy Island. They forced the British garrison there to surrender. The French destroyed the settlement and took the British to Louisbourg as prisoners. While the British awaited transfer to Boston in a prisoner exchange, their officers were free to move about town and they took note of the weaknesses in the so-called fortress.

In Boston, the freed officers reported their observations to a governor named William Shirley. They told him that the land side of Louisbourg was undermanned, and that the morale among the French troops was low, largely because of poor food and because they had not been paid in months. They made sketches of Louisbourg's defenses which they gave to Shirley.

Shirley raised a force of more than 4,000 New Englanders for an expedition against Louisbourg. The first siege of Louisbourg began on 11 May 1745. The British had captured strategic points near the fortress and ships blockaded the harbour. The colonial army used sledges to haul artillery across marshy ground to high points.

By June 28th, Louisbourg's walls had been breached and Warren's fleet were poised to enter the harbour. Short on supplies of ammunition, and under pressure from the town's merchants, the French governor surrendered.

Second Siege in 1758

A British fleet appeared off Louisbourg in early June 1758. The second siege began when James Wolfe led troops ashore, south of Louisbourg. From this base, he drove the French defenders from several strategic positions around the harbour. By June 25th, his artillery had knocked the French guns on Battery Island out of action, and his siege was drawing nearer to Louisbourg's walls.

The French returned fire, but as the days passed, most of their cannons were disabled. On July 21st, a British mortar shell exploded in the magazine of a French ship and it caused a fire that spread to two other vessels. This fire burned all three to the waterline.

On July 26th, a British Royal Navy raiding party attacked the two remaining French warships. They set one on fire, and sailed the other one away to join the British fleet.
