Aims

The objective of this course is to learn to apply the concepts and techniques taught in the first-year Microeconomics course as well as in the Mathematics courses to problems faced by decision-makers in the public sector as well as in organizations more generally.

Contents

The course consists of two parts: personnel economics and public economics. The first part of the course focuses on incentives and workers' motivation inside organisations. The role of monetary and non-monetary incentives in motivating, selecting, and attracting workers to organisations is studied. Topics include the effects of pay-for-performance on motivating and selecting workers, optimal hiring and firing policies, education, team-work, promotion tournaments, and benefits.

The second part of the course focuses on how markets are systematically imperfect in case of public goods, externalities, and asymmetric information. Markets may also bring about undesirable inequality. We study the role of the government in reducing the welfare losses that arise when markets do not function perfectly, and discuss the limits to government intervention. We also study the effects of taxation and redistribution. The normative discussion of government intervention is complemented by a positive analysis of collective decision-making.

The two parts of the course are lectured in parallel. Each week, the lecture on Tuesday is devoted to public economics, the lecture on Wednesday to personnel economics, and the lecture on Friday alternates between the two parts. Also, each week you have one tutorial on public economics and one tutorial on personnel economics. A graphical representation of the structure of the course can be found in the PowerPoint on Canvas.

Exam material

Selected chapters from the required literature as well as the lecture slides and exercises. Lecture slides and exercises are published weekly on Canvas.
