

Review of All Addition and Subtraction Concepts

Tick...tock...tick...tock... The clock ticked loudly as Charlie, Charlotte, Natty, and Hairo worked quietly at their desks. Hairo watched as the seconds hand on the clock worked its way around the numbers. The room was quiet except for the sound of Mom's voice drifting in from the next room. She was reading "Goodnight Moon" to Ella in preparation for the toddler's nap time. Hairo glanced over at Natty. He could not believe how his sister had changed over the winter. He knew that he had also changed. His jeans didn't touch the top of his shoes anymore, and he gained weight, too, but Natalia, whom the family called "Natty," had changed and grown even more. Natty's hair was long now, and she was almost as tall as Charlotte. More than her appearance had changed; she was calmer and smiled more often.

Natty had suffered greatly from their parents' passing, and she had picked up many nervous habits during their stay at the children's home in Peru. Hairo smiled to himself remembering how surprised he and his sister had been the day of the adoption announcement. He had kept this memory tucked in a special place in his heart. It had been last summer when his "new" family had come to Peru on a mission trip. They had spent most of their time together and grown to love each other dearly. At the end of the summer, shortly before the family was scheduled to return to the States, Mom and Dad had excitedly broken the news of the adoption.

Natty had been excited to the point of tears, but Hairo had been more hesitant. Even when they had all flown home to Minnesota, Hairo had harbored reservations. However, when they had arrived at their new home, and Hairo had seen how much love had gone into the preparations for their arrival, he had slowly lowered the guard around his heart. Over the winter, they all had adjusted to Hairo's and Natty's presence in the home. Now it was spring, and there was only a few weeks of school left before summer break! Hairo had enjoyed his first year of homeschool, but he was excited for summer.
