International Review of Research in Mental Retardation, 2007-08-30. Autism Spectrum Disorder is one of the most researched and popular topics in the fields of psychology, psychiatry and special education. In the last 30 years, the amount of new information on assessment and treatment has been astounding. The field has moved from a point where many considered the condition untreatable to the current position that it may be curable in some cases and that all persons with this condition can benefit from treatment. Intervening with school-age children continues to be a major focus of assessment or intervention. However, expanding the ages of those receiving more attention from younger children to older adults is becoming more prevalent. The consensus is that intensive treatment at the earliest recognized age is critical and that many adults evince symptoms of the disorder and warrant care. The field is full of many proposed treatments, many of which offer promise but no data. Thus, a book on evidence-based assessments and interventions across the life span should be of value in helping to sort out the more credible interventions as defined by the research and what methods have the best support. Given the popularity of the topic and the vast array of potential assessments and treatments available, this volume will be aimed at delineating what the researchers have shown has the best evidence to support particular methods.

Intellectual Disability and Stigma
Katrina Scior, Shirli Werner, 2016-09-16. This book examines how intellectual disability is affected by stigma and how this stigma has developed. Around two per cent of the world's population have an intellectual disability, but their low visibility in many places bears witness to their continuing exclusion from society. This prejudice has an impact on the family of those with an intellectual disability as well as the individual themselves and affects the well-being and life chances of all those involved. This book provides a framework for tackling intellectual disability stigma in institutional processes, media representations and other less overt settings. It also highlights the anti-stigma interventions which are already in place and the central role that self-advocacy must play.
