latest attempt to summarize the wealth of knowledge now available on geomagnetic phenomena has resulted in this

Function of Time of Year and Latitude Wallace H. Campbell, GEOLOGICAL SURVEY DENVER COLO., 1981 An analytic representation of the quiet daily variation of the geomagnetic field Sq was obtained for the North American region with a mean error of less than 10% of the daily variation range The month by month 24 12 8 and 6 hr Fourier components of the field in H D and Z were found to have significant annual and semiannual changes that in general agreed with the expectations for ionospheric current sources for the changes Tables and computer programs are provided from which the quiet field representation may be constructed for any selected North American location At the equator the Sq H variation was over 125 gammas and showed significant equinoctial maxima At 30 deg to 40 deg the lowest values of Sq H less than 20 gammas were representative of the region of the ionospheric current vortex Mid latitude Sq D values were about 50 gammas in range Great enhancements of the daily field particularly in Sq H and Sq Z occurred at high latitude with a strong summertime maximum range of about 90 gammas in Sq H at about 75 deg lat Five degree latitude representation of the quiet daily field change illustrate the variations occurring during the day and in different months of the year Author The Earth's Magnetic Field Girija Rajaram,P.
