

'Quote, Unquote' short guide: Harvard style of citing and referencing

If you would like this document in an alternative format please ask staff for help. On request we can provide documents with a different size and style of font on a variety of coloured paper. Electronic versions can also be supplied.

Introduction

'Quote, Unquote' contains detailed information and advice about using the Harvard style of referencing at Leeds Metropolitan University (for details see the Further help section on p.5). This short guide focuses on examples.

During your studies you will need to show your knowledge of other people's work or ideas. These may be obtained from many types of sources such as: books, journal articles, websites etc. However, it is important that you do not pass off other people's work as your own. If you do, it is regarded as plagiarism or cheating. When you use (quote, paraphrase or summarise) information from any source, you must both cite and reference it to:

- acknowledge the work of other writers and researchers
- refer to established experts to give your work authority
- enable your tutor or others to trace your sources easily
- avoid accusations of plagiarism.

There are a number of referencing systems in use, but at Leeds Metropolitan we recommend the author-date or 'Harvard' style.

Note: There are variations in referencing practice across different subjects and courses.

Check course documentation or any guidance you are given.

There are two stages to referencing sources for a piece of academic work using the Harvard system.

- 1) Refer to the source in your text (the citation).
- 2) Give full details of the source in your bibliography or list of references at the end of your work (the reference).
