

Memos, Minutes of Meetings

Memos - A written communication used within a business to provide information, updates, policies, or instructions to staff members are called internal memos, also known as Memorandums. They tend to be specific and concise, intended to convey particular information in an understandable and straightforward way. Memorandums are essential tools for internal communication and can be distributed in hard copy or digital format.

- A person in a high position will typically send a memo to the subordinates.

On the other hand, memorandums are sometimes delivered to people of the same rank. The phrase "memo for" should be used in this case rather than "memo to".

Types of Memorandum

Memorandum for requests. This document does a favor. Do not demand or decree. Start immediately with the request and the reason for it, and end your document politely by stating the deadline for such a request and the reason behind the deadline.

Memorandum that responds. This is used when you respond to the previous document according to the order of the original request. Use boldface headings to emphasize or clarify groupings. Close politely by making an assurance that you are willing to be at service again.

Memorandum that informs is used to state, explain, or clarify a policy, issue, or others. should be concise and clear.

Format

Here is a format you can use to create business memos:
