Cet article propose une réflexion historique et épistémologique sur l'association, qui va jusqu'à l'identification, entre la narratologie et la théorie pan-narratoriale des récits de fiction (théorie qui postule l'existence d'un narrateur fictionnel dans tous les récits de fiction). Ce faisant, il remet en cause l'évidence ou la naturalité de cette théorie. Quelques remarques sur le contexte d'apparition et d'instauration de cette théorie peuvent avoir une portée plus générale pour les divers secteurs de la théorie littéraire.

This article proposes a historical and epistemological reflection on the association, which goes as far as the identification, between narratology and pan-narratory theory of fictional narratives (a theory which postulates the existence of a fictional narrator in all fictional narratives). In doing so, it calls into question the obviousness or naturalness of this theory.
