Abstracts

Divinity is the objective reality of the Divine. It could be observed in nature, in deep ecology, in cosmology beyond ZPE, and in depth psychology. The Divine could be personified in human behavior when the organ brain achieves the desired level of perfection. A science of divinity and the Divine is possible to develop taking science (world), humanity (you, me, and they), and the spirit (consciousness) together. One beneficial spin off of this approach in worldly science is the development of an algorithm starting in consciousness and ending in space, time, and energy, describing how "will" is translated into an event.

Introduction

The Divine and divinity exist in the real world. Their existence throws the issue of their sensing, feelings, and experience with the systems psyche (Cognitive Organ), with or without the brain, with or without the blood-pumping heart. Consciousness-as-such is the Divine. Consciousness-as-experienced is not always so! Consciousness-as-articulated by a divine personality might help other persons to sense, feel and experience divinity. As contact with curd could convert the whole milk into curd, it is believed that the easier way of experiencing divinity is the association or physical contact of a divine personality. The Divine Grace, therefore, is real provided one's psyche, one's brain, and one's heart is in the state of receiving this Grace. In the extended scope of science, new physics might explain this deep 'abstract phenomenon. And thus, the development of a science of the Objective Reality of the Divine remains a possibility. In contrast to philosophy, science speaks in a common universal language. We hope, this universal common language would help us to develop the post-materialistic, non-reductionist and non-positivistic science of this highest quality in the real world in the third person's perspectives.

The author has already published three papers on the Science of Divinity [1,2,3]. The moot points in developing the science of divinity are as follows.

1. The experience of divinity has three cardinal components: An experience of Transcendence, a feeling of Peace, and an alluring sense of charm of an effulgent and resplendent, which is effectively soothing cognitively and biologically.

2. There are three levels of Transcendence. First transcendence is from the domain of cause time, space, and pleasure to the domain of respectively silence, stillness, emptiness, and nothingness. Second transcendence is from this silence stillness emptiness and nothingness to the domain of immortality, eternity, infinity, and Ananda respectively. Third transcendence begins from immortality, eternity, infinity, and Ananda and culminates in the primary Source of divinity, which is consciousness-as-such. On the ladder of triple transcendence, the science transits from a positivistic, objective, reductionist nature to the science of zero-point energy state. The second transition is from zero-point energy state to the science of quality, ending at the border of the Universe. The third transition is from the domains of quality to a non-qualifiable state of the Essence of the Multiversity. This is the Essence from which multiple universe(s) generate and vanish. Subsequent to triple transcendence follows a reversal, a step-wise inversion for reverting back to the four-dimensional space-time world. This posterior connection is responsible for
