Investigating Surface Interactions

You saw that when the spring-launched cart was in contact with the box it pushed the box forward, when you removed a force from your hand that was keeping the spring temporarily deformed. Even though the cart was applying a force to the box when it was in contact with it, the box and cart always eventually came to a stop.

What are some everyday phenomena where objects seem to stop on their own after being put into motion?

If you drop something, even from the highest place in the world to the lowest place in the world, it will eventually come to a stop.

What causes all these moving objects to eventually come to a stop?

A surface or the ground stops them from going further down.

Different objects resting on different surfaces can be easier or harder to get to start moving. Let us think about what interactions are happening between the object and the surface it is resting on that can help explain why this is.

Use the materials your teacher sent home with you to carry out an investigation to figure out why some objects start and stop moving on some surfaces easier than others. You will use the rubber band to measure the amount of force it takes to pull a shoe across a surface. If the rubber band has to stretch more, then more force is being applied. If the rubber band stretches less, then less force is being
