

STAGES OF PRESSURE ULCERS

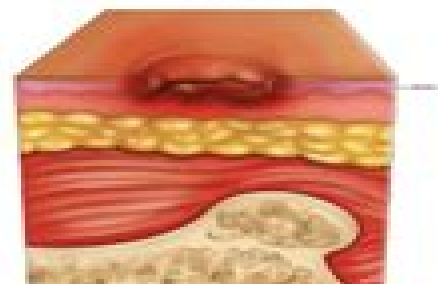

Pressure ulcers often affect immobile or disabled patients and tend to develop when the skin and underlying tissue are subjected to excessive and/or prolonged pressure. They usually occur in people who are immobile or have poor circulation, and with incontinence or moisture. They can occur on any part of the body, but are most common on the buttocks, heels, and bony prominences of the back, hips, and ankles. The following diagram illustrates the four stages of pressure ulcers.

Stage 1

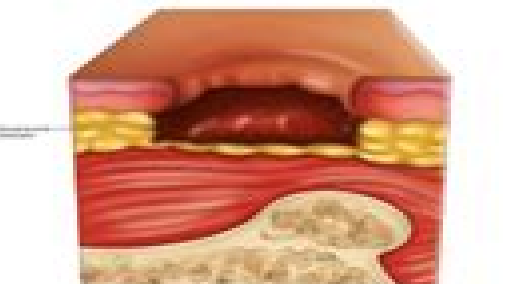

Non-blanchable redness of the skin and a possible loss of skin temperature.

Stage 2

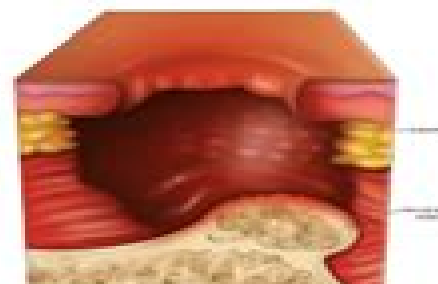

Partial-thickness skin loss with a crater-like appearance.

Stage 3

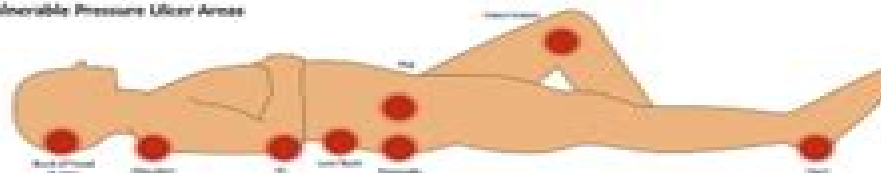

Full-thickness skin loss. The ulcer may extend into the subcutaneous tissue.

Stage 4

Full-thickness skin loss with exposed muscle, bone, or other structures.
