

A Framework for Evidence-Based Massage Therapy

Informed Consent

Informed consent involves a two-way flow of information to establish a clear consensus regarding the intended goals of treatment.

Comprehensive Assessment

A comprehensive person-centered assessment assists the clinician to come up with a treatment plan that is best suited to each individual. It also helps identify those with a higher likelihood of red flags (serious underlying pathologies) or yellow flags (prognosis factors for delayed recovery).

Outcome Measurements

Outcome measurements can be used to monitor and evaluate the effectiveness of the treatment plan and adapt care accordingly.

Education & Reassurance

Education is focused on the concept of a person-centered approach that addresses biopsychosocial influences and empowers people with shared decision-making. This can be used to provide reassurance and facilitate an evidence-based understanding of treatment options and encourage the use of active approaches to help manage symptoms.

Multidimensional Treatment Plan

A person-centered treatment plan will integrate best available evidence and the patient's goals, values, and preferences. If appropriate, the treatment plan will start with multidimensional treatment plan to reduce pain, reduce stress, improve function, or enhance well-being.

Reassessment and Reevaluation

Reassess the patient's status at each visit for new or worsening symptoms, or satisfactory recovery. Then the patient is discharged, treatment is continued, or treatment is escalated based on response to the initial treatment plan, risk/benefit assessment and shared decision.
