Abstract

The biblical story, as a paradigm of the human psychological and spiritual odyssey, asserts an inherent union of our experience of history and God's. In the picture that the Bible paints, this is God's world and we live in it. The import of that centers in the reality that life for God, as Spirit, and the life of the human psyche interact, interface, or cut across each other at such a substantive or foundational level as to affect the description and definition of both our psyches and God as Spirit. To employ a meaningful and authentic theology (concept of God) requires a useful and honest anthropology (concept of humankind). To engage anthropology thoroughly and exhaustively lands one finally in theology. One must come at each with an eye to the other. The same can be said as well about the science of any other facet of the cosmos, when viewed as God's created world.

1. Introduction

Religion is barren without a comprehensive appreciation of the creation, and creation at the center can only be comprehensively understood religiously. The natural and social sciences must inquire finally of theology. Theology must listen and speak to the natural and social sciences. Psychology is an applied social science with a base in the natural sciences, just as medicine, education, and preaching are. Psychology properly exercises the stewardship of its mandate by collecting data, formulating theories that account for the data, and applying the interpreted data to concerns in psychotherapy.

Understanding the Roles of Religions in Development Carole Rakodi, 2007 Investigating Local Knowledge Paul Sillitoe, 2019-05-23 Originally published in 2004 Local knowledge reflects many generations of experience and problem solving by people around the world increasingly affected by globalizing forces Such knowledge is far more sophisticated than development professionals previously assumed and as such represents an immensely valuable resource A growing number of governments and international development agencies are recognizing that local level knowledge and organizations offer the foundation for new participatory models of development that are both cost effective and sustainable and ecologically and socially sound This book provides a timely overview of new directions and new approaches to investigating the role of rural communities in generating knowledge founded on their sophisticated understandings of their environments devising mechanisms to conserve and sustain their natural resources and establishing community based organizations that serve as forums for identifying problems and dealing with them through local level experimentation innovation and exchange of information with other societies These studies show that development activities that work with and through local knowledge and organizations have several important advantages over projects that operate outside them Local knowledge informs grassroots decision making much of which takes place through indigenous organizations and associations at the community level as people seek to identify and determine solutions to their problems
