Modular Instruction - an Alternative Strategy in Higher Education Angela Boren, Sherrell Foree, 1978

Abstract An experimental model based on personalized modular instruction and competency objectives is described for teachers and students at the university level seeking an alternative to traditional educational methods The teacher is seen as a cooperator in all phases of the modular course from pre assessment to learning activity and reinforcement through post assessment The model was tested on 109 students and results were compared to those of 64 controls Students in the modular instruction group did not have significantly higher cognitive scores than controls but did have higher psychomotor scores Student response to the program was positive

Student Centered Physical Education presents over 100 fun physical activities that not only promote student fitness and skill development but also build the foundation for a physically active life The authors modular approach allows teachers to mix and match activities in order to achieve specific goals creating multiple opportunities within each class period for students to succeed Authors Timothy Smith and Nicholas Cestaro who together have more than 50 years of teaching experience have developed a student centered approach to physical education to replace the outdated subject driven approach By focusing on the needs of the preadolescent student rather than on sports or calisthenics this proven program challenges exclusivity boredom and gender bias Their strategies and activities make physical education relevant to your students and motivate them to participate in physical activity both in the gym and after school
