

The first stage of the mission is to launch the probe into orbit around the planet. This is done by using a powerful rocket engine to accelerate the probe to a high velocity. Once in orbit, the probe will begin its descent towards the surface.

The probe is designed to withstand the extreme temperatures and pressures of the atmosphere. It is equipped with a heat shield to protect it from the intense heat of reentry.

The probe will be launched on a mission to study the atmosphere and surface of the planet. It will collect data on the composition of the atmosphere and the temperature and pressure of the surface.

The probe will be launched on a mission to study the atmosphere and surface of the planet. It will collect data on the composition of the atmosphere and the temperature and pressure of the surface.
