

A scanning electron micrograph (SEM) of a nutshell surface. The surface is dark and textured, with numerous small, circular pits and larger, irregularly shaped depressions. A prominent feature is a large, blue, elongated structure that appears to be a microvittum, which is a specialized cell wall structure in plants. This structure is oriented horizontally and has a slightly curved, ribbed appearance. The background is a mix of dark grey and black, with some lighter, blueish-grey areas that suggest the presence of other cellular structures or mineral deposits. The overall image has a high-contrast, scientific quality.
