Neural Mechanisms of Startle Behavior

Robert C. Eaton,1984-10 In the past fifteen years there has been considerable interest in neural circuits that initiate behavior patterns For many types of behaviors this involves decision making circuits whose primary elements are neither purely sensory nor motor but represent a higher order of neural processing Of the large number of studies on such systems analyses of startle circuits compose a major portion and have been carried out on systems found throughout the animal kingdom Startle has been an important model because of the reliability of the behavioral act for laboratory study and the accessibility of the underlying neural circuitry However probably because of the breadth of the subject this material has never been reviewed in a comprehensive way that presents the elements common to startle circuits in the different animal systems in which they occur This book presents a diversity of approaches based on a broad background of animal groups ranging from the earliest nervous systems in cnidarians to the most recently evolved and advanced in mammals The behaviors themselves are all short latency fast motor acts when considered on the time scale of the organism and involve avoidance or evasion although in some cases we do not yet completely understand their natural role These behaviors occur in response to stimuli that have sudden or unexpected onset

Neural Mechanisms of Goal-Directed Behavior and Learning

Richard B. Thompson,2012-12-02 Neural Mechanisms of Goal Directed Behavior and Learning provides information pertinent to the neuronal mechanisms of motivation and learning This book focuses on the theoretical frameworks within which researchers analyze specific problems Organized into six parts encompassing 39 chapters this book begins with an overview of the problem of goal directed behavior that occupies a central position in psychology This text then examines the behavioral investigations that are directed at delineating the role of contiguity and determining the possible mechanisms of reinforcement in classical defense and reward conditioning Other chapters consider the homeostatic regulation of various functions such as nutrition temperature respiration blood pressure and fluid and electrolyte balance This book discusses as well the effects of experimental treatments on memory The final chapter deals with the relationship between perception and memory This book is a valuable resource for psychologists and scientists Graduate students in behavioral neuroscience will also find this book useful

The Behavioral and Neural Mechanisms of the Social Transmission of Information and

Behavior Laura Ann Agee,2021 Social learning can be broadly defined as the acquisition of new information or behaviors via observation of or interaction with a conspecific The ability to learn socially is particularly important in humans and dysfunction of this ability can deeply impair functioning As such developing a thorough understanding of the circumstances under which social learning can occur and moreover how social input is processed by the brain to produce social learning is essential In this dissertation I document the findings of a number of investigations into this topic conducted using rat models of social learning A specific emphasis is placed on the social transmission of food preference STFP model in which a naive observer rat acquires a preference for a food through interaction with a conspecific demonstrator that has recently eaten that food In the experiments outlined here I have 1 assessed whether observer rats are able to adjust their learning in the STFP paradigm based on the quality of information a given demonstrator has provided in the past 2 tested the ability of rats to learn to associate a neutral cue with the presentation of a reward by observing an experienced demonstrator react to the cue 3 examined activity of the immediate early gene IEG product Arc following dual recall of a socially transmitted food preference and a socially acquired fear association and 4 examined expression of the IEG product c Fos in orexin A producing neurons and related areas following acquisition and recall in STFP Behaviorally our results indicated that in the STFP model observers did not adjust their learning based on the characteristics of their demonstrator Similarly observer rats were unable to acquire a cue reward association through observation of a trained demonstrator alone although our results did indicate that their later behavior following direct learning was modulated by the behavior of their demonstrator Finally our investigation of the brain mechanisms underlying social learning found no clear differences in Arc expression following STFP social fear recall and no change in orexin A producing cell activity though orexin cell activity was highly predictive of social behavior and food consumption
