In the forest products business and management literature one common categorization of different types of innovation is product innovation process innovation and business systems innovation Forest products companies have long placed high emphasis on process innovations which are related to yield maximization manufacturing efficiency and operating costs reduction This is considered insufficient from a long term perspective as customer needs become increasingly complex in a changing market environment Business and managers should seek innovation opportunities from the market and customer side of the business i e business system innovations In a company marketing serves as the interface between the organization and its market and customers and thus possesses substantial opportunity for developing business system innovations The approach to marketing in the forest products industry has traditionally been production and sales oriented Management attention was almost entirely on keeping the production capacity in full and letting sales worry about how to move the products As technology advanced competition intensified and customer needs became more complex the forest products industry needed to start adopting a more sophisticated marketing approach by focusing more on meeting the needs of customers and other stakeholders The term marketing sophistication is used in this research to characterize how marketing is understood and implemented in a firm Literature in general marketing and forest products marketing both document an evolution in marketing sophistication from a production sales orientation to a customer market stakeholder orientation However there is no systematic investigation of marketing sophistication especially in the context of the forest products industry To fill the knowledge gap this research examines marketing and marketing sophistication in the forest products industry A theoretical foundation about the evolution of marketing sophistication is firstly developed The relationships between a market orientation and other firm characteristics are then assessed Data was collected through mail survey from the top 100 global Forest paper packaging industry companies identified by PricewaterhouseCoopers PWC in its 2008 global forest Paper Packaging Industry Survey The results show that market orientation is positively related with other firm cultures including learning orientation and innovativeness Market orientation can play an important role in a firm by potentially supporting other cultures and practices that are related to firm performance Also the connection between a market orientation and corporate social responsibility implementation could potentially signal that a market orientation is affiliated with a stakeholder orientation The implied importance of market orientation from the study leads to a more in depth investigation of marketing sophistication within the context of the private U S sawmilling companies The marketing culture marketing strategies and the role of marketing were studied using a case based approach Findings suggest that the companies did not have a holistic understanding of marketing and were mostly production sales oriented Also many companies did not have an integrated marketing department but a sales department that was mainly performing sales work Although a production sales orientation largely existed it was quite clear that many of the studied companies have begun to pursue a customer market stakeholder orientation as a more sophisticated marketing approach

Because there is a lack of innovation research in the forest products industry and innovative activities in the industry are not well documented this study attempted to fill that void The objectives of this study were to understand the process and definition of innovation in the forest products industry identify the constraints on innovative activities identify resources that would improve innovation in forest products companies compare the innovation environments in Alaska and Oregon and provide a benchmark study for innovation in the forest products industry This study revealed that there are several aspects of innovation in the forest products industry In addition the innovation process is a combination of semiformal development stages trial and error intuition and luck A variety of factors constrained companies from being more innovative including government regulations shipping and labor costs lack of cash flow raw material characteristics marketing expertise and raw material supply There do not appear to be any resources that would be helpful to forest products companies at least none that the interviewed companies could recommend Offering companies the chance to exchange ideas and network is the most valuable resource available The innovation environments in Alaska and Oregon are somewhat similar yet different in the marketing tactics employed and the techniques used to obtain market information Furthermore the type of innovation projects that each region focuses on differs as does the actual process used to develop innovations Future research should focus on completing a quantitative component to this study developing short courses or 1 day seminars identifying factors that contribute to innovation success and failure investigating why the forest products industry is not innovative by nature and exploring the external acquisition of innovation in the forest products industry
