I

I UNDERSTOOD in that hour what been like a memory on the brink of —the odour of chrysanthemums. was a beauty and a full instantaneous its significance that was familiar feel past all doubt, that as I stood balcony I breathed a friendship from yet it was a reflection, a signal of from where? There was an interval between me and its source, as if ceiling of a room to one who stands outside the window. I had just left the first-floor balcony: the street park opposite, and over the tree-top murmurous horizon.

The lull of the quiet street that afternoon cradles my recollection. there is nothing quite like it since of horse traffic; the narcotic effect of hansom cabs—but soft and remote on the balcony as though the world indeterminate sort of toy that jingle I don't think I imagine it, but there ness of the sinews of life then; an ennui with itself. And still does a cloud noon grow stale in the street in just where in the country it ripens to a deep
