

ONE NATION ONE ELECTION: A COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS FROM VOTER BEHAVIOR TO POLITICAL POLARIZATION

- Bhaswat Prakash¹

ABSTRACT

This paper analyzes the potential impacts, both positive and negative, of implementing simultaneous elections across India, commonly referred to as "One Nation, One Election." This idea of One Nation One Election was earlier placed before the nation by former Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee. One nation one election is a debatable issue that is the reason even Prime Minister Narendra Modi asked for national debate, public opinion and national survey by expert on this issue before execution of such kind of electoral reform. India is called the largest democratic country of the world because China is the communist country despite most populous country. The general elections for the Lok Sabha and state assemblies are held at the gap of five years. But it is observed that election is a whole year process in the India. Government spends a lot money, time and energy on the conduct of different elections. This proposed reform would synchronize the timing of national, state, and local elections in order to avoid frequent election cycles. The analysis finds that synchronized elections could generate significant cost savings for both state and central governments by reducing expenditures related to election administration, security deployments, and governance disruptions. Annual cost savings are estimated to be upwards of ₹45 billion.

The impact on state governments is mixed; while national issues may overshadow regional concerns, state governments would benefit from more time focused on governance versus electioneering. Citizens could experience less voter fatigue but lose the ability to express dissatisfaction with state governments at different times. For industry, synchronized elections provide more policy stability and less political uncertainty. However, extended periods of single party rule could reduce government accountability. Similarly, national parties are expected to benefit over regional parties. Overall, simultaneous elections promote improved governance focus and boost political and economic stability. Yet, the loss of regional autonomy and reduced accountability are significant risks. On balance, the analysis suggests synchronized elections would be beneficial but may require complementary electoral reforms to mitigate potential adverse impacts on regional representation and government accountability. This abstract summarizes the key findings of the full analysis while highlighting the complex considerations involved in assessing this major electoral reform proposal. The paper provides a comprehensive, evidence-based evaluation of the expected pros, cons, costs, and benefits.
