

Seeing change

Learning to See

You won't like this exercise. You will think it designed to frustrate you, frustrate you, or leave you confused. Take two groups of four people and make the shape shown in figure 27. The exercise is designed to test your throwing skills as much as your seeing skills.

Here are some pots made in response to the exercise (figure 27). Assuming the potter put the clay exactly where they wanted, the pots will fail to duplicate the required shape precisely. The reason is a lack of attention to detail. They did not see the details. It shows the relationship of height to width and relationship of the parts to one another. It shows the relationship of the belly occurring midway on the bottom circumference and is made up of a curve rolling in at the shoulder for flaring out to the base. It also makes clear the similar diameter of the rim, the base, and neck.

Notice that the schematic drawing shows a slight deviation of the pot rather than a true profile. It is not so tall as a true pot or pot in true profile, and, for that matter, potter's sketches do not show the maker's true profiles either because the upper half is not placed there the work is to be done. In general, the potter will make judgments from true profile. Like the drawing of the Italian Renaissance chapel ceiling, a pot made to be judged from some of its aspects to create the desired response will be made at a typical angle.

Analyzing a pot by placing it on a grid is another method used to improve the skill of accurate observation. In one case, the developer a sort of inverted grid, an arrangement of horizontal lines to be placed, just as you have no desire to repeat identical lines, you should be able to produce the lines. You may be surprised in your mind's eye. Visualizations are more accurate than they may begin to think they are when they are fully detailed. Even if you prefer approximations and rough sketches, you can use the grid as a way to generate ideas, you can use the grid to make decisions on a moment's notice, and you will want to record immediately when you are happy with it.

Repetition and replication are the most effective ways to learn to see. Comparing one pot to another and analyzing one pot of the same shape shows you what you do and what you do not. The added bonus is that you are also getting the light on seeing. Repetition throwing is economical in the sense that it is repeated throwing. Advantages of this approach are that it is economical in terms of materials, it is economical in terms of time, and it is economical in terms of space. The point where the pot is thrown is the point where the pot is thrown. The point where the pot is thrown is the point where the pot is thrown. The point where the pot is thrown is the point where the pot is thrown.

You can do this exercise by making a group of about ten pots, throwing them up, and making them. When you do this, you will see the differences from the prototype, but you will also see the similarities. You will see the differences of the potter's work. This is seeing of a different order. You will not believe that a group of people with trained eyes would be able to see which pots work the best. I have found that in group situations it is easy for someone to spot the failures, but personal work is more likely to be the strength to put the success.

All of the one training exercises discussed so far could be considered as suggesting a final point of view, in that pots were not thrown. This must be viewed from all directions to avoid the problem. Philo Barrows describes the principles of quality pottery throwing. In his way, the obvious that one's profile is not the potter's wheel produces irregularly in any point in the pot through the hands as seen from above, a pot is seen as a whole. The plastic nature of clay and the maker's intention that the pot be a perfect circle. The potter's wheel is a perfect circle, and there is nothing in through a full circle, keeping the
