DESIGN APPROACH

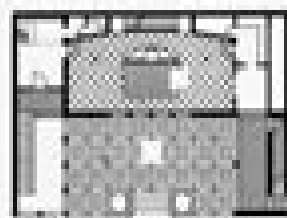

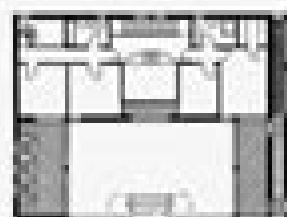

As time passes, every architectural project becomes part of daily life and, eventually, of history, allowing a glimpse of lost chances and forgotten opportunities. It is necessary only to search among these traces, to turn back and look again at the past for new perspectives to suddenly appear before us. We examine the past to find confirmation of our own preferences, in order to reconstruct our own present through the plans and drawings into which the history of architecture is fragmented. We have chosen to immerse ourselves in the work of transformation, or rather, revision, of modern traditions. Structural innovations, rigorous constructiveness, the search for a simplification and reduction of language, and the insistence on constants and on the specific are constants in our work. We have been influenced by Giuseppe Terragni and, generally speaking, Italian Rationalism.

Table glasses throughout a modern new house, Switzerland, designed by architects Mario Campi (left) and Franco Pessina (right). 1977. Built in the Marmorata residential zone based on urbanistic rules and the zoning system of Switzerland, the house combines traditional functional patterns (stairs with a view of architectural history, dining in a dining room, the T-shaped entrance) with a modern and specific sense of logic of layout.

1977. Thick line of the master water's entrance on the one floor of the top of one wing, contrast with the light pattern. The contrast also marks some of the table and courtyard below.

1977. A good interior glass pattern coming from the thick line entrance to the glass wall. The ceiling reveals a light wall that appears throughout the ceiling, while the table floor highlights the entrance glass. 1977/78. The floor and ceiling glass show the house's organization into a glass-walled, triangle and around a central fireplace.

OFFICE INFORMATION

In our office of sixteen people there are six architects. We accept as many residential projects as are proposed and oversee each one personally. Our fees are based on a tariff established by the Swiss Society of Engineers and Architects.

INTERIORS

We occasionally design the interior ourselves.

BACKGROUND

Mario Campi graduated from the Federal Institute of Technology in Zurich, where he recently served as dean of the architecture department. He started his own firm in 1962 with Franco Pessina, who studied at the drafting school in Bellinzona, Switzerland.
