Personality Characteristics of the Personality Disordered Charles G. Costello, 1995-10-27

People with disordered personalities are much more likely than most to practice substance abuse attempt suicide and suffer from major anxiety and depressive disorders They are also more difficult to treat for mental disorders and their chances of relapse are greater Clearly then it is essential that mental health professionals be able to identify and cope with personality disorders in their patients Unfortunately the task of accurately assessing disordered personalities based solely on nebulous polythetic categories such as those provided in the DSM-IV is akin to that of the three blind men who were asked to describe an elephant What is needed is a new approach to conceptualizing personality disorders based on observable behaviors rather than inferential nosologies In this book Charles G Costello lays the foundations for just such an approach Reculer pour mieux sauter to retreat so as to better leap ahead is the phrase Dr Costello uses to articulate the spirit in which this book was conceived Stated more practically his goal in presenting this volume is to afford psychotherapists an opportunity to step back from questionable clinical categories and redirect their attention onto the individual personality traits commonly associated with personality disorders to more clearly define them their origins and their functional relationships and in so doing open up new avenues for research and provide clinicians with a surer conceptual footing upon which to base diagnoses and devise treatment strategies To achieve that end Dr Costello invited a group of leading researchers and clinicians in the field to share their understanding of the current state of knowledge about personality disorders Over the course of eleven chapters each devoted to a separate personality characteristic these experts review the latest research data and offer their professional insights into the major personality characteristics of the personality disordered including aggressiveness anxiousness emotional instability impulsiveness dependency narcissism detachment paranoia obsessiveness and sensation seeking
